Gandhi's Philosophy of Education

"By education, I mean an all-round drawing out of the best in child and man - body, mind and spirit." M.K. Gandhi.

The above-mentioned statement of Mahatma Gandhi is sufficient enough to comprehend his views on education. Gandhian education has been characterized as encompassing the head, the heart and the hands that means the all-around development of the child. According to him, education is that which "transform village children into model villagers. It is principally designed for them. The inspiration for it has come from the villages...Basic education links the children, whether of the cities or the villages, to all that is best and lasting in India. It develops both the body and the mind, and keeps the child rooted to the soil with a glorious vision of the future in the realization of which he or she begins to take his or her share from the very commencement of his or her career in school."

Wardha Scheme of Education (1937)

The Wardha scheme of Education, popularly known as 'Basic Education' occupies a unique place in the field of history of elementary education in India. The Wardha Education conference appointed a committee of distinguished educationists under the chairmanship of Dr Zakir Husain. The Committee consisted of nine members. Among them, Prof. K. G. Saiyidain's name is prominent. Other members were Arya Nayakam, Vinova Bhave, Kaka Kalelkar, J. C. Kumarappa, Kishori Lal and Prof. K. T. Shah. The committee was appointed to prepare a detailed education plan and syllabus. It submitted its first report in December 1937 and another in April 1938. This report has since become the fundamental document of the 'Basic Education' and the scheme has come to be known as the Wardha Scheme of Education. It was approved by Mahatma Gandhi and was placed before the Indian National Congress at its Haripura session held in March 1938.

Nai Talim/ Basic Education

Nai Talim was conceived as a "craft-based" education in which practical skill serves as the centre and foundation of an individual's spiritual, cultural and social development and in which skills such as literacy and mathematics are learned in context with and in service to their craft. In this approach to schooling, academic subjects are taught in an interdisciplinary way and never separated from their practical application in the world. The craft-centred approach instils the dignity of labour, the value of self-sufficiency, and strengthens local culture. Gandhi also believed that an essential part of education was the "reverent study of all religions" with the insight that ahimsa (nonviolence) is the basic truth contained in all of them. Nai Talim in Gandhi's conception only included free and compulsory education up to age 14.
